

Dudley was making something enormous. Enormously small. He folded a paper tower, pressed its corners with one careful claw and added a flag smaller than a biscuit crumb. "That," Mabel announced, "needs an exhibition."